Little Red Riding Hood

“Let’s put the cupcakes in your basket,” said Little Red Riding Hood’s mother.

“Mmmm!” said Little Red Riding Hood.

“They’re for Granny – NOT for you,” laughed her mother.

Her mother watches her from the window.
“Now – off you go. And –”

“I know. I know – Don’t speak to strangers in the woods,” laughed Little Red Riding
Hood.
“Mothers!”

Little Red Riding Hood ate her apple and sang as she walked along.
But – oh! Who is this behind her?
A wolf is watching her from behind a tree.

“Good morning little girl, where are you going?”
“I’m going to see my Granny. She’s sick in bed.”

Oh, Little Red Riding Hood, remember – don’t speak to strangers.

“Goodbye,” said the wolf. “Remember now – don’t speak to strangers. Ha! Ha! Ha!”
The wolf ran off very quickly.
“Goodbye, Mr Wolf,” said Little Red Riding Hood.

The wolf ran quickly to Granny’s house. He went in.

“I’m hungry,” he said.
He opened his mouth wide and ate Granny in one big gulp.
“Mmmmm!” he said.

“Hello Granny! It’s me, Little Red Riding Hood.”

“Come in. Come in, little one,” said the wolf, in Granny’s clothes, from the bed. “You look pretty today.”

“How are you, Granny?” asked Little Red Riding Hood.

“A little better. Thank you.”

“Look Granny. I have some cupcakes for you.”

“Thank you,” said the wolf. “How nice!”

“Granny, why are your ears so big?”

“To hear you, little one.”

“And, Granny, why are your eyes so big?”

“To see you, little one.”

“And why are your arms so big?”

“To hug you, little one.”

“But, Granny, why are your teeth so big?”

“To – EAT YOU, LITTLE ONE!”

And the wolf jumped from the bed.

“HELP! HELP!”

Little Red Riding Hood ran to the door.

“Mmmm! Dinner, dinner, here I come,” laughed the wolf as he ran after her.

“Stop! Stop!” said a woodcutter.

He came in and stopped the wolf by cutting him with his ax.

“Goodbye wolf.”

“Oh, thank you,” said Little Red Riding Hood.
“But where’s Granny?”

Granny jumped out of the wolf's stomach.
"Oh, Granny," said Little Red Riding Hood.
"Are you OK?"
"Yes, I'm OK," said Granny, "a little weak, but very hungry. Now where are those cupcakes?"
